Kannada is not a cousin of Hindi. It belongs to a different language family. Even so, a Hindi speaker starts with a big advantage, because the two have lived side by side for thousands of years and picked up the same habits: the verb goes last, small endings do the work of को and से, and both took words from Sanskrit. These notes lean on that. Build the sentence in Hindi, swap in the Kannada words, and use English or Marwari wherever Hindi falls short.

K.1 · HOW TO READ THESE NOTES

Three spellings, one rule each.

Every word appears up to three ways:

Kannada (Roman)	How you would type it on WhatsApp: nodi, beku, oLage . Use it to recognise the word, not to pronounce it.
Say it (देवनागरी)	The pronunciation. When the Roman and the Devanagari disagree, trust the Devanagari.
ಕನ್ನಡ	The Kannada script, for signs and menus. It spells the spoken form you will actually say, not the textbook form.

WHY DEVANAGARI?

It already writes ड/द, ट/त, ण/न and आ/अ as different letters, so it spells Kannada sounds far better than English letters can.

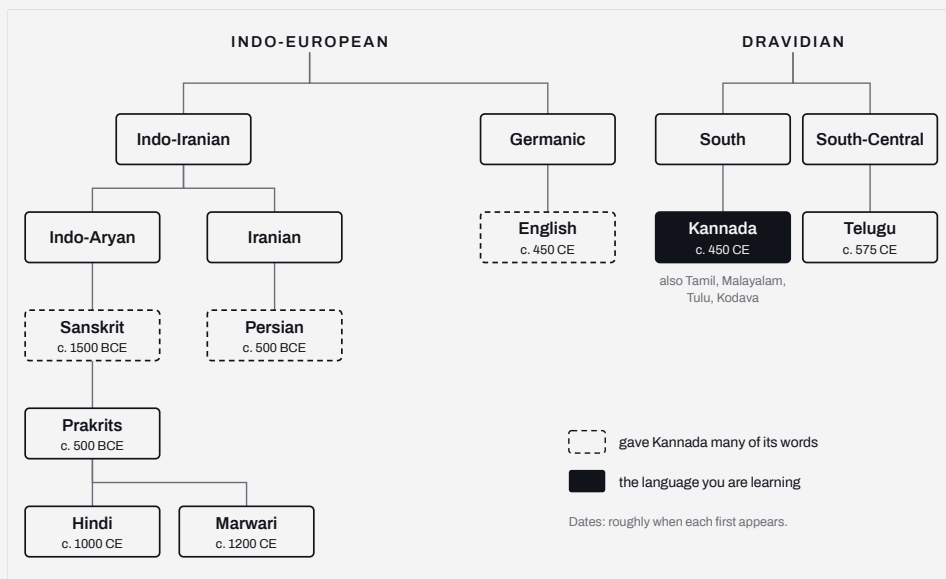

Two conventions run through everything:

- Capital L = ಲ, the Marwari kaalo-L (see Sounds). A plain ल (mele, illa, alli) is the ordinary ल. LL is a doubled ल, as in kootkoLLi.
- Every अ is spoken, even the last one. Read वर as vaa-ra, never vaar. Hindi drops that final vowel; Kannada never does.

K.2 · FIVE LANGUAGES, ONE LEARNER

Where each of my languages comes from.

You bring four languages to Kannada class: Hindi, Marwari, English, and the Sanskrit built into Hindi. A fifth, Persian, arrives quietly through words you already use. They come from two unrelated families.

Two families. Hindi, Marwari, English, Persian and Sanskrit are Indo-European. Kannada is Dravidian. The dashed boxes are where most of Kannada's borrowed words come from.

Sanskrit, the classical donor

The oldest recorded Indo-Aryan language. The Rigveda was composed around 1500–1200 BCE and passed down orally for centuries. Pāṇini fixed its grammar around the 4th century BCE. For about two thousand years it was the language of learning across all of India, the Dravidian south included. That is how its words reached Kannada.

Hindi, Sanskrit's descendant

Sanskrit → the Prakrits (the spoken languages of the Buddha's and Mahavira's time) → Apabhramsha → Old Hindi, around the 10th–12th century. The Delhi dialect, Khari Boli, absorbed Persian and Arabic under the Sultanate and the Mughals and became Hindustani. In the 19th century that split into Hindi (Devanagari, leaning on Sanskrit) and Urdu (Perso-Arabic script, leaning on Persian). Hindi has been an official language of the Union since 1950.

Marwari, Hindi's sibling rather than its child

The language of Marwar (Jodhpur, Nagaur, Barmer). It grew out of Old Western Rajasthani, also called Maru-Gurjari (12th–16th century), which is also the parent of Gujarati. So Marwari sits beside Hindi on the family tree, not under it. Mirabai, from Merta in Marwar, sang in Rajasthani mixed with Braj. Marwari merchants kept their accounts in their own script, Mahajani. Marwari is not in the Eighth Schedule, so the census counts its speakers under Hindi.

Two Marwari sounds are exactly the ones Hindi lacks and Kannada needs: ळ (काळो, black) and heavy use of ण (पाणी, water).

English, the Germanic latecomer

Germanic tribes (the Angles, Saxons and Jutes) brought it to Britain in the 5th century CE, around when the first full Kannada inscription was carved. After the Norman conquest of 1066, French and Latin words flooded in (Middle English, Chaucer). Then came Early Modern English, the English of Shakespeare. It reached India with the East India Company (chartered 1600) and became the language of higher education after Macaulay's Minute of 1835. Today it is Kannada's newest source of words: bus, phone, ticket.

Persian, the quiet fifth

You don't speak it, but you know its words. Persian was the court language of the Bahmani and Bijapur sultanates in north Karnataka, and later of Hyder Ali and Tipu Sultan in Mysore. Kannada took words like khaali, kaagada, baaki from it, the same ones Hindi took via the Mughals. When a Kannada word sounds like Urdu, this is why.

Kannada, the Dravidian elder

Proto-Dravidian split into branches long before any of them was written down. Kannada is South Dravidian, with close cousins Tamil, Malayalam, Tulu and

YOUR ळ IS VEDIC

The first line of the Rigveda, agnim īle purohitam, contains a ळ. Hindi lost the sound; Marwari, Marathi and Kannada kept it.

SAME CENTURY

The Halmidi inscription (c. 450 CE) is two centuries older than the earliest English poem, Caedmon's Hymn (c. 670).

Kodava. Telugu is on the neighbouring South-Central branch. Like English, Kannada has an Old, a Middle and a Modern stage:

K.2

Stage	When	Landmark
Pre-Old Kannada (Purva Halegannada)	450–800 CE	Halmidi inscription , c. 450 CE: the first full sentence in Kannada ¹
Old Kannada (Halegannada)	800–1200	Kavirajamarga (c. 850), the oldest surviving book; Pampa's Vikramarjuna Vijaya (941)
Middle Kannada (Nadugannada)	1200–1700	Basavanna's vachanas (12th c.), poems in plain everyday Kannada, much like Kabir's dohas; Purandara Dasa (16th c.), the father of Carnatic music
Modern Kannada (Hosagannada)	1700 →	Kuvempu, Bendre, Karanth: 8 Jnanpith Awards , more than any other language except Hindi

- Script. Brahmi → Kadamba → the shared Kannada–Telugu script, which split in two around the 13th–14th century. That is why the two scripts look alike. In Karnataka it is also used to write Tulu, Kodava and Konkani.
- State. Kannada-speaking regions were joined into one state on 1 November 1956, now celebrated as Kannada Rajyotsava. The state was renamed Karnataka in 1973.
- Status. Declared a Classical Language of India in 2008, together with Telugu.
- Spoken ≠ written. Everyday Kannada and formal Kannada differ a lot. Written ಬರುತ್ತದೆ baruttade is spoken baratte. You are learning the spoken kind, which is the right choice for conversation.

Why your Hindi helps anyway

Unrelated languages that share a region for long enough start to share habits. Linguists call such a region a sprachbund, and South Asia is the textbook example.² Hindi and Kannada share ancestors only through loanwords, yet their sentences are built the same way:

Habit	Hindi	Kannada
Verb goes last	ghar jaao	mane-ge hogi
Endings come after the noun, not before it (postpositions)	ghar se · ghar mein	maney inda · maney alli
“To me” is the subject	mujhe pasand hai	nanage ishta

¹The date is debated; some scholars place Halmidi nearer 500 CE. An Ashokan edict of the 3rd century BCE at Brahmagiri, in Karnataka, may also contain a single Kannada word, isila.

²The idea was set out by M. B. Emeneau in “India as a Linguistic Area” (1956).

Habit	Hindi	Kannada
A helper verb for “for yourself”	baith lo	koot koLLi
Echo words	chai-vai	tindi-gindi
Retroflex ङ ञ ण	yes	yes

That is why “build it in Hindi, then swap” works so well.

THE TRADE RAN BOTH WAYS

Many linguists think
Sanskrit got ङ ञ ण from its Dravidian neighbours.

K.3 · IS KANNADA FROM SANSKRIT?

No. Kannada borrowed from Sanskrit; it did not descend from it.

Kannada is Dravidian; Sanskrit is Indo-Aryan. They are separate families. Kannada took a huge amount of vocabulary from Sanskrit but none of its grammar. English has the same relationship with Latin:

$$\text{Kannada : Sanskrit} = \text{English : Latin} \quad (1)$$

English took thousands of Latin and French words but is still Germanic, not “derived from Latin”. Hindi is the opposite case: it is Sanskrit’s descendant (Sanskrit → Prakrit → Hindi). So by (1), Hindi is Sanskrit’s child and Kannada is its borrower.

The four layers of a Kannada word

Layer	From	Hindi helps?	Examples
Core : verbs, ide/illa , pronouns, endings	Dravidian	No, memorise	baa, hogu, beku, mane, kai
Formal / abstract	Sanskrit	A lot	varsha, dina, madhya, doora, ishta
Admin / everyday	Persian	Yes	khaali, kaagada, baaki, kharchu, joru
Modern	English	Yes	bus, phone, ticket, check, wash

Two kinds of Sanskrit loanword

tatsama (same as that)

Borrowed unchanged, so it looks identical to Hindi: varsha वर्ष, dina दिन, madhya मध्य, doora दूर.

tadbhava Borrowed, then reshaped to fit Kannada's sounds: sakkare (born of that) ಸಕ್ಕರೆ ← śarkarā (Hindi reshaped the same word into शक्कर); baNNa ಬಣ್ಣ, colour ← varṇa; aagasa ಆಗಸ, sky ← ākāśa.
Hindi does this too: हाथ ← hasta, आग ← agni.

TIP

Mental model. When a Kannada word looks like Hindi, it is because both took it from Sanskrit (or Persian), not because Kannada borrowed from Hindi. The shared layer is your shortcut. The everyday core has no shortcut: learn it by heart.

WARNING

False friends. Some words look like Hindi and mean something else:

- kai ಕೈ = hand, not कई (several)
- mane ಮನೆ = house, not माने (meaning)
- nija ನಿಜ = true; the Sanskrit and Hindi निज means one's own

K.4 · SOUNDS

What's new, and what you already own.

Sound	Hindi	Kannada	So...
Retroflex ㄖ (kaalo-L)	no (Marwari: yes)	yes	New, but you have it from Marwari
Short e/o	no	yes	Listen for vowel length
Final अ	dropped: kamal	spoken: kamala	Say every vowel
Doubled consonants	yes: पत्ता / पता	yes: illi / ili	Hold the double
ज़ फ़ क़ ख़ ग़ (Persian sounds)	yes	not in native words	Drop the dot: zor → joru
Flaps ड़ ढ़	yes	no	Not needed

Everything else (ड ट ण, the aspirates, long आ ई ऊ) exists in both. You already own it from Hindi.

How to say it

1. Long vs short vowels. Hindi: आ vs अ. English: father vs cup. Hold the long ones; the length is part of the word.

2. kaalo-L (capital L). Anchor: the ळ in Marwari कालो. Curl your tongue back to where you say ण, then say ल.
3. Short e / o. Hindi has only the long ones (के, को). Kannada also has short ones: short e is like English bet, short o like the start of obey. Just notice it for now.
4. Retroflex D / T / N are your Hindi ड ट ण, the D in laddu. maadi, nodi, beda, kodi all use ड, never द. A dental द makes them sound wrong.
5. Doubled consonants. illi (here) vs ili (mouse), just as Hindi पत्ता (leaf) differs from पता (address).

DANGER

The one Hindi habit to break: dropping the last vowel. Hindi writes कमल and says kamal. Kannada writes ಕಮಲ and says ka-ma-la. It's mane, not man; varsha, not varsh; illa, not ill. Kannada words end in a vowel, so English loans get one too: bus-u, phone-u.

K.5 · THE TWELVE PATTERNS

Twelve rules that do most of the work.

Building blocks

P1 · Word order = Hindi	The verb goes last, as in Hindi. Build the sentence in Hindi, then swap the words. andar aaiye → oLage banni ; is sofe pe baithiye → ee sofa mele kootkoLLi .
P2 · i / a / e = here / there / where	illi / alli / elli , and for things, idu / adu / yaavudu (this / that / which one). Before a noun, this and that shrink to ee and aa : ee sofa , aa mane . Hindi has the same system: yahan / vahan / kahan .
P3 · Friend / polite / formal	The bare verb is for friends (maadu = kar). Add -i for polite (maadi = karo / kariye). Add -iri for formal or plural (maadiri = kijiye). One irregular: baa → banni .
P4 · -koLLu = "for yourself"	Adds the sense of doing something for yourself, like Hindi's helper lo : baith lo , rakh lo . kootkoLLi = baith jaiye ; nintkoLLi = khade ho jaiye .
P5 · Question words skip the K	Hindi question words start with k (kya , kaun , kab). Kannada ones start with e or yaa (enu , yaaru , yaavaaga). The one exception is hege (how).
P6 · Glued-on endings	-ge / -kke / -ige = को, के लिए · -inda = से · -alli = में. Which "to" ending to use depends on the last letter: -e/-i → -ge (mane- ge); -a → -kke (oota-kke); -u → -ige (Bengaluru → Bengalur-ige). After a vowel, a y slips in before the ending: mane-y-inda, mane-y-alli.

P7 · Sanskrit words are free
Formal words are often the Hindi word: varsha = वर्ष, madhya = मध्य, doora = दूर.

The sentence engine

P8 · maadi = karo	Any English verb + maadi makes a command, just as Hinglish does it with karo : door open maadi = door open karo .
P9 · ide / illa	Noun + ide = है (there is). Noun + illa = नहीं है (there isn't). meeting ide / meeting illa .
P10 · -aa makes a question	Add -aa at the end for a yes/no question: beku → bekaa? · ide → idyaa? · aaytu → aaytaa? Hindi puts kya at the front; Kannada puts -aa at the end.
P11 · illa fuses on	illa alone means no . It also sticks onto verbs: gottu → gottilla , aagu → aagilla . Habit verbs take -alla instead: baratte → baralla .
P12 · Knowing a skill = “it comes to me”	baratte (from baru , come) = Hindi aata hai . nanage Kannada baratte = mujhe Kannada aati hai , word for word.

WHY K VS E?

Hindi's k- (kya, kaun, kab) is the same ancient sound as English wh- (what, who, when) and Latin qu- (quid, quis, quando). All three are Indo-European. Kannada's e-/yaa- comes from a different family. Marwari keeps the k- too: काई, कुण.

illa ≠ alla. Both are “not”, but they answer different questions.

- illa = doesn't exist / isn't there (नहीं है): time illa, coffee illa.
- alla = isn't that one (वो नहीं): idu nanna mane alla = this isn't my house.

And watch alli: on its own it means there; glued to a noun it means in (queue-alli = in the queue).

Five shapes and a word list.

TIP

You don't have 37 phrases. You have 5 shapes and a word list. The word order is Hindi's (verb last), so build the sentence in Hindi first, then swap in the Kannada words.

Template 1 · the do-hack

[thing] + [English verb] + maadi

Hindi	darwaaza	kholo
Kannada	door	open maadi

maadi = karo. If you don't know the Kannada verb, use the English one and add maadi.

- door open maadi · window close maadi · file check maadi
- car wash maadi · kai wash maadi · plates arrange maadi · tindi maadi (have breakfast)
- Native alternatives: baagilu tegiri (open the door) · kitaki muchchi (close the window)

Template 2 · come and go

[place / direction] + banni / hogi

Hindi	andar	aaiye
Kannada	oLage	banni

banni = aaiye, hogi = jaaiye. The direction comes first, the motion verb last.

- oLage banni (come in) · horage hogi (go out) · mele hogi (go up) · keLage banni (come down)
- mane-ge banni (come home) · office-ge hogi (go to the office) · oota-kke banni (come and eat)

Template 3 · do a thing

[object] + [native verb]-i

Hindi	movie	dekhiye
Kannada	movie	nodi

The object comes first and a real Kannada verb comes last.

- movie nodi (watch a movie) · alli nodi (look there) · book odi (read the book) · songs keLi (listen to songs)
- nija heLi (tell the truth) · change kodi (give the change) · break tagoLLi (take a break)
- tindi tinni (eat breakfast) · ee mobile tagoLLi (take this phone)

- kootkoLLi (have a seat) · nintkoLLi (stand up) · queue-alli nintkoLLi (stand in the queue)

Template 4 · like, want, know

[thing] + ishta / beku / gottu

Hindi	(mujhe)	Bengaluru	pasand hai
Kannada	(nanage)	Bengaluru	ishta

Liking, wanting and knowing. nanage (to me) = mujhe, and you can usually drop it. Add illa to negate.

- Bengaluru ishta (I like Bengaluru) · sweets ishta · junk food ishta illa
- fruits beku (I want fruits) · fruits beda (I don't want fruits)
- Kannada baratte (I know Kannada) · gottilla (I don't know)

Template 5 · is it, is it done

[thing] (+ state) + ide / illa / aaytaa?

Hindi	coffee	garam	hai?
Kannada	coffee	bisi	idyaa?

- shop hattra ide (the shop is near) · coffee bisi idyaa? (is the coffee hot?)
- tindi aaytaa? (had breakfast? It's Bengaluru's "how are you?") · meeting aaytaa? (is the meeting over?)
